TITLE : CROFTER FELLOW

Most farmers around the world are trapped in a vicious cycle marked by low risk-taking ability, lack of investment, reduced productivity, poor market orientation, little value addition, and low profits. Farmers are left with very little as middlemen bridge the gap between farms and markets. Consider developing a buying or selling organic food digital marketplace for farmers and suppliers to enable local producers interact directly with customers or restaurants. These businesses assist farmers in obtaining greater prices for their produce by eliminating middlemen from the distribution chain. They also help farmers save money by securing purchases and payments at the farm gate. Buyers will create an account on the organic ecommerce platform, add food products to the cart, then make payment for their order. Buyers can simply order fresh, healthy, locally sourced products from the comfort of their homes using this method or they can also buy direct from farmers online. The merchandise will be delivered to the customer's location by delivery personnel. Product shipment can be handled by either the operator or a third-party logistic provider.
